Agnostic becomes Soul Winner
A few years ago, Mike Kwon was an agnostic. Then someone at his university gave him a Bible. “Once I read it, I began to realize that the God of heaven really was real, and that I could have a personal experience with Him.” Mike started going to church regularly and was later baptized.

Mike’s parents, also Seventh-day Adventists, wanted him to study for the ministry. They suggested Andrews University. But Mike, impressed by the dedication and godliness of Hartland students at his church (such as Douglas Na’a, David Casas, and Michelle Chai), replied, “What about Hartland?”

Now a junior, Mike says, “My experience here has drastically increased my spirituality. I’ve realized that a worldly lifestyle can only be selfish; but when we are laboring for souls without having self in mind, that’s when we are able to grow spiritually.”

Classes provide much-needed theory, but the most integral and unique part of Hartland’s educational program is vocational training, where students learn to apply the theoretical in a practical way. “My most important lesson was learned in the gardens, experiencing with my own hands the principles of how God’s government works. In the kitchen, I learned righteousness by faith from washing dishes; I learned how to be faithful in the least. By applying these lessons and being faithful in little things, I have been trained to be ready for the bigger responsibilities.”

Truly the Lord has honored Mike’s faithfulness. Mike recently has been given the “bigger responsibility” of coordinating Hartland’s outreach activities. Almost every afternoon, he can be found in a nearby town visiting Bible study contacts and opening God’s Word to hungry souls. Now he is in the process of starting a prison ministry.

Unfortunately, Mike’s parents can no longer support him in his studies at Hartland College. He tried to support himself through work scholarship, but soon realized if he wanted to graduate, it would take him nine years! Mike has a deep burden to go out and finish the work quickly. He realizes that we don’t have much time left on this earth! Now, because of the Missionary Training Fund, Mike is looking forward to graduating in a couple of years.

“My vision is to take the everlasting gospel to the world,” says Mike. “After graduation, I plan to work in the South as a Bible worker, bringing truth into the homes and watching the Holy Spirit change lives through the truth of God’s Word.”

Without your gifts to the Missionary Training Fund, Mike would not be able to fulfill his goal for many years. Thank you for helping to hasten Christ’s coming!

Students plant seeds of God’s truth in North Carolina.

by Leilani Hortaleza

“If there is one work more important than another, it is that of getting our publications before the public, thus leading them to search the Scriptures. Missionary work—introducing our publications into families, conversing, and praying with and for them—is a good work and one which will educate men and women to do pastoral labor.” ~ Testimonies, vol. 4, p. 390.

This December, five students took up the challenge of literature evangelism in North Carolina under the leadership of ReNeita Samuel, a Hartland graduate. The stories they share are just a few examples of God’s faithfulness as they sought to be faithful in His work.

“I had just gone through a whole block of businesses, and no one would take even one piece of literature. It was very disappointing. So I took time to agonize with God, because I knew the spiritual warfare that was taking place, and I deeply desired to reach the people. At the next business, a lady asked me how I was doing. I couldn’t lie, so I told her, and she asked if she could pray with me. The Lord truly answered her powerful prayer, because she took some books, and many others did the same. Her name was Angela, and she truly was an angel to me.”

“We were almost finished for the day, so I started running between houses. I met a man who told me that he was studying the book of Daniel, so I showed him The Great Controversy and God’s Answers.* He was very excited about the books, but he had no money, so I suggested that we go inside his house to hunt for change. He found enough to get a book. There are people waiting for someone to help them understand the prophecies and be ready for Jesus’ second coming. I recently read, ‘The lost sheep of God’s fold are scattered in every place, and the work that should be done for them is being neglected. From the light given me I know that where there is one canvasser in the field, there should be one hundred.’ Testimonies, vol. 6, p. 340.”

“The man I was canvassing was not interested, but his daughter wanted the books. She even urged her father to sign up for Bible studies after taking the book I was offering. Canvassing this winter has helped me realize my dependence on God for everything! We must first spend personal time with God in order to work with people in His wisdom and not our own.”

*God’s Answers is an abridged version of Bible Readings for the Home.

Aaron, Giancarlo, and a few other students are colporteuring on Sunday and Wednesday afternoons during this term. Please pray for them as they touch more lives with truth-filled literature and lead them to search the Scriptures.
MISSION TRIP

Breaking Barriers

A Hartland college student and his Romanian friends win the trust of skeptical villagers.

“What is happening here!” the teacher demanded. “If you don’t leave now, I will call the police!” I had suspected something like this might happen, but we had already promised to do the Vacation Bible School. We couldn’t stop now.

Last summer, I organized a group of youth from my church in Romania to do mission work in a small village. The church was dying, and my friends and I wanted to do something worthwhile during our summer vacation. Following the pastor’s advice, we planned a two-part program: Vacation Bible School for one week, followed by a health expo the next week. “This is great!” the pastor enthused. “It’s unusual to see young people organizing everything themselves. I wish more young people would come and do what you are doing.”

The principal of the local elementary school gave us permission to use the school for our children’s meetings. It seemed the perfect neutral meeting place! However, on the second day a teacher and a priest from the village burst through the door, shouting threats and angry words. They thought we were trying to hide something, but the principal had simply forgotten to tell them we were coming.

The teacher soon calmed down and left, but the priest stayed to see what we were doing. After watching the children sing enthusiastically about Creation, he asked them, “I see that you like to sing. What if we have a meeting tonight at the Orthodox church in the village at 4:00? Will you come?” But the children chorused, “No!”

The next day, the children were waiting for us outside the school. The door was padlocked. “Are we still going to have our meeting?” they clamored. We found an open field, and continued meeting there for the rest of the week. Although it was very rainy that season, the Lord always stopped the rain just before our meetings.

At the beginning, the villagers were very skeptical. We learned later that the priests were threatening not to baptize their children or perform their weddings if they attended our meetings. In spite of this, we had a steady attendance at both the children’s meetings and the health expo.

The one Adventist in that village, a little old lady, kept us informed of the village talk. Several women told her, “It’s so nice the way those young college students talk to us. We can see that they’re different. Even though they’re educated, they don’t look down on us.”

Others thanked us personally, saying, “We’ve never had anybody come to our village and do something for us without having any other interest. But we see that you really care. Thank you.”

By God’s grace, walls have been broken down in that village. After I graduate, I want to go back and start a ministry there, continuing what we started. In the meantime, I pray that God will continue to break down barriers in the people’s minds and prepare the way for His truth.

‘I didn’t know how I was going to direct my life,” says Isabel Larrotta, “but once I got to Hartland, I realized what God was calling me to do.”

Isabel comes from Colombia, South America. While at Hartland, she discovered that the Lord had given her a talent and a love for teaching children. “In every place I work, I see how children are affected by their environment. I want to be a bright spot in their environment and make a difference in their lives.

“During my junior year I taught at the Hartland Elementary School. I think I learned the most from the patient example of my supervisor. He taught me how to reach the students’ hearts, especially in discipline. Now that I’m on internship, I value his example even more. I didn’t realize it was so important.”

Looking back on her years as a student at Hartland College, Isabel recalls, “I experienced many things, both exciting and challenging, but I never thought they might have happened for a reason. Now I realize that God was preparing me for things I would face after I left Hartland. I cherish the lessons I learned, not only about teaching, but also about life. I learned the difference between really trusting God and merely having theory.”

Isabel is currently interning at a small SDA church school in Wilmington, North Carolina, where she teaches five students. She says, “They wanted someone from Hartland because they knew we use biblical principles in practical application. What I like most about working with my students is that they are so impressionable. I teach them simple things, and they get so excited when they understand! I really love that part of teaching.”

Recently she shared an encouraging experience she had. Little Johnny* had trouble reading. “Every day for the first month he would have the same problem. He knew the letters, but something seemed to be blocking his mind. Often he would start crying because he was so frustrated with himself. One day I took him outside the classroom. ‘Would you like to pray with me?’ I asked. ‘Yes,’ he sniffled. When we went back inside, he had calmed down a lot. Since then, he has made significant progress.”

Isabel’s dream is to work in a Spanish-speaking country where the people aren’t well-educated. With God’s help and with the education she has received at Hartland, she is sure to be a success wherever the Lord leads her.

“I know this is not very much money, but may the Lord multiply it many times as needed. I know there is a great need for funds everywhere. Only God can touch the hearts of those who have much more than I. God bless your work and His work.” -Lilian

“We just received the Aug-Sept Hartland Ministry Report, which I see as the best yet - local music programs, new workers, students, etc. Here is a donation to use for whatever is most urgent.” -Maurice

“It’s so good to know there is a college training young people for the work. God bless and keep you all.” -John & Beverly

“May God continue your ministry by leaps and bounds until we can do it no more. Then Christ will come quickly. God bless you in His service and in your lives!” -Pat

Why I like coming to Hartland convocations

“We are new to the Seventh-day Adventist faith. From the moment we got here, we felt something different. Through the messages we are hearing, the Lord is confirming that we made the right decision to follow the truth. As God fills our cups with more knowledge, we go back and tell what we have heard, and live it to the best of our ability.”

Lucette Rivas
Tennessee, age 14

“I love this place! I know that I will hear good messages. In youth class I learned about prayer and character building. I realize that I need to be closer to God and believe in Him more.”
A Glimpse of God
by Jeremiah Fameronag

“I didn’t go to China to see results. I went to share Jesus through my life.”

“Even though I don’t know God, I’ve had a glimpse of who He really is because of your selflessness,” Janeson told me. Janeson came from a wealthy, yet broken, family. One day he invited my co-worker and me to his home to meet his mother. Before we left, he thanked us for coming to China as volunteers.

This past summer, the Lord called me to share my faith in communist China. Because I went as an English teacher, I felt a great responsibility to show my students who Christ really is. As a foreigner, I was not allowed to talk about Christianity or religion at all, on threat of imprisonment. But every day I asked God to help me live and share His light.

From July to November, I taught students of all ages, from 3 years old to 43! Despite the restrictions, I still found ways to share my beliefs. Once in conversation class I asked my students, “Why do we exist?” Most of their answers were either “to have a career,” “to help support our families,” or “to have a good life.” Then someone asked me, “What about you?” I explained, “I believe the purpose of life is service. When we live selfless lives, we will find genuine happiness.” (Of course, I couldn’t tell them it was a biblical principle.) I didn’t fully understand the impact of that conversation until just before I left, two months later.

Jessica was an agnostic. We often had discussions about premarital and same-gender unions, suicide, and other such things. She was in favor of all of them! Usually after our discussion, she would ask, “What about you, Jerry? What’s your view?” and I would tell her. A few weeks before I left, she said, “Now I understand your views, Jerry. Now I understand that God is not glorified when we kill ourselves or have same-gender or premarital unions.” Today she is a baptized member of the Seventh-day Adventist Church!

During my four-month stay, I sometimes got depressed and thought, I’m not really doing anything. It seems I’m only teaching English and nothing is happening. But while I was doubting, the Lord showed me something. I was reading a missionary book about Nate Saint, in which he mentioned, “We are sent into a mission field not to reap results, but to show love.” Then I realized my mission trip was successful, not only because souls were touched, but because Jesus was seen through selflessness. ☞
Two very powerful books! Both books deal with the question of fidelity to God’s Word versus compromise with the world. The first book is based on a presentation on the theology of the 1957 book Seventh-day Adventists Answer Questions on Doctrine (QOD). The second deals with the history surrounding QOD.

Colin D. & Russell R. Standish
$12.95 EUA1 192 pages
Revelation reveals a powerful global movement prior to the return of Christ—deeply riveted in politics and religion. The developing European and North American Unions are initiatives toward that goal. The papacy is the religious backbone of this movement and seeks to become the planet’s superpower.

The 144,000, the Great Multitude, & the Return of Jesus
Colin D. & Russell R. Standish
$15.95 GMDA1 352 pages
What is the 144,000 and the great multitude of Revelation? SDA pioneers focused much attention upon them. Like a sudden and unexpected flash of blinding lightning, this group of 144,000 is introduced in Rev. 7 and again revealed in Rev. 14. The authors solve most of the divisive interpretations from the Bible itself.

The Everlasting Gospel
Colin D. Standish
$15.95 EGO1 368 pages
Why do so many Christians strongly believe “the gospel” and yet ignore its central theme. The authors wonder why church denominations declare themselves to be “full gospel” fellowships, yet are ignorant of the “everlasting gospel” revealed to John the Revelator. It is the only gospel which will be shared with all the world prior to the second coming of Jesus.

Postmodernism and the Decline of Christianity
Colin D. & Russell R. Standish
$12.95 PADO1 160 pages
Postmodernism has not only invaded the world but the church. It is a concept in which there are no universal laws, no ultimates, no immutables. Truth is nothing more than the whims of each individual. This book exposes how far this influence has invaded the portals of the Christian establishments and how it is destroying the very fabric of society.

“Do you want me to renew your subscription to Last Generation?” Diana Wolfe asked her daughter, Sayward.

“Oh yes, Mother, it’s my favorite!”

Not only do Tom and Diana Wolfe of Lenoir City, Tennessee, send Last Generation to family members, but they also use it in a variety of ways in their literature ministry, which they have named “The Bible Says.” Besides putting ads for free literature on the radio and in magazines, they have placed two Silent SAM literature boxes in a dark county. Frances, a church member, keeps them filled with Last Generation and other truth-filled magazines or books. “I can’t believe how fast they leave the box!” she remarks.

A year ago, Tom and Diana started using Last Generation in their prison ministry. “Of all the people to whom we give Last Generation subscriptions, the prisoners are the most excited to receive them!” The Wolfes also send subscriptions to Bible study contacts, new church members, and family members. “Literature can speak to people’s hearts better than we can,” says Diana with tears in her voice. “It can reach people that we’ll never be able to reach. We truly believe that the literature ministry will finish the work.”

Robin and Bonnie Rogers from Murphy, North Carolina, also share a passion for literature outreach. For the past two years, they have bought cases of Last Generation’s Halloween special issue to distribute in two nearby towns. “At one of the Halloween events this year, we met a young man who was married to a Wiccan,” Bonnie relates. “He drank and used drugs, but he said, ‘I’m trying to turn my life around.’ The cover of the magazine, which fit in with the theme of Halloween, piqued his spiritual interest. We both realized it was a providential encounter.”

The Rogers are also involved in church planting in a dark region of Tennessee, and they are using Last Generation to stimulate Bible study interests in the area. “We have a Silent SAM box in front of a grocery store, and we put Bible interest cards in each magazine,” Bonnie explains. “Usually, before the end of the month, there are only one or two magazines left in the box. One time when we went to check on the box, there was a man reading a Last Generation magazine right there in front of the store!”

We hope that these stories have inspired you to think of different ways you can use Last Generation to broaden your outreach efforts. For great literature resources, call our sales office at 1-877-527-8436.

Meet One of Our Board Members

Pastor Jeff Wehr, from Rice, Washington, has a long history with Hartland Institute. He has taught at Hartland College, has been a convocation speaker, has helped as an assistant editor and writer for Last Generation, and has served on Hartland’s constituency and board for a number of years. His wife, Alena, is an alumna of Hartland College, class of 1988. They have two children, Nathan, 17, and Laura, 14.

Nancy Arias

“Being a teacher is wonderful! You can always find work anywhere in the world,” says Nancy Arias, our new Hartland Elementary School teacher/principal.

The Arias family has known about Hartland since the early 90s. “We’ve been coming to convocations and camp meetings every year,” says Nancy. “What I enjoy most are the grounds, the chance to walk everywhere, the music department, and especially the Christian environment.”

Nancy has twenty years of teaching experience. She and her daughter Janeen moved to Hartland from Pennsylvania, where her husband Julio and son Junan are living until Junan finishes college in June. Then they will be reunited as a family in this area.

“Hartland offers a unique opportunity for students who want to be Christian teachers in the fullest sense of the word,” states Nancy. Thank you, Nancy, for your dedication to the work at Hartland and your willingness to follow the Lord’s leading. We look forward to working with you and your family!
The apostolic church was unquestionably pure and zealous of good works. However, the aged apostle John saw disturbing signs of the influence of the Gnostics and the coming of “that wicked,” the spirit of Antichrist. The church was gradually sliding downward into apostasy.

Three centuries later, Emperor Constantine “converted” to Christianity. This was the first of several milestones marking the digression of the church from the straight path set forth by Christ. Next, the corrupted Alexandrian manuscripts were adopted as the official Scriptures. This influenced many Christians to accept mysticism and, centuries later, the monastic movement. It also paved the way for the adoption of spiritualistic ideas, such as immortality of the soul.

Emperor worship was common in the society of pagan Rome, so most people followed Constantine’s lead and “converted” to Christianity. Yet, his conversion was not genuine, for he claimed the title of Pontificate Maximus, the head of the pagan religion. (This title was later conferred on the Bishop of Rome.) However, exclusive worship was not rendered to Christ. Instead, the church leaders claimed the worship of the masses for themselves. To attract members, the rites, rituals, and festivals of paganism (such as Sunday worship) were adopted by the church.

Another milestone was the Roman church’s polarization of laity and clergy as two distinct classes. Contrary to Scripture, a hierarchical structure was implemented. The pope gradually acquired the powers of a king with absolute authority over the entire church, and he created a visible structure that eclipsed the spiritual structure. This led to abuse of power. Church members could no longer enjoy liberty of conscience. They were oppressed in many ways, and dissenters were silenced by excommunication or even death. The common people were forbidden even to read the Scriptures.

The consequences were far-reaching. Because society, economy, scientific discovery, education, and intellectual inquiry were stifled, the world was launched into the Dark Ages. In the Western world, people lived in spiritual and intellectual darkness without the light of the Scriptures. It was not until the Reformation, when the Scriptures were made more accessible to the common classes, that the Roman yoke was broken.

Throughout the history of the Christian church, both vigilance for the truth and liberty of conscience have been essential to the preservation of true Christianity. The time is coming soon when we will no longer have the liberty of conscience that we now enjoy. May God strengthen us to “hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown” (Revelation 3:11).

*Ther Ling Kwok wrote this when she was a student at Hartland College. She graduated in 2006.
“W hen I came here, I was really sick,” says Angelita Ancheta. “But after three days, I already felt a difference!”

Angelita came to Hartland Lifestyle Center with kidney failure. The doctors had told her, “You need to do dialysis immediately.” However, knowing the risk involved with dialysis, she wanted to find an alternative. After hearing the testimony of another health guest who has experienced lasting results from his stay at Hartland, Angelita decided that this would be a wise investment.

“When I came, I was always tired and cold. Just going up and down the stairs made me tired. But now I feel good! I have energy to do my housework!”

Because she doesn’t like the cold, Angelita tended to stay inside most of the time. But this just made her circulation sluggish, so she was still cold! However, at Hartland, Angelita was encouraged to go for a brisk walk every morning with her therapist and participate in a group exercise session with the other health guests. After one of these exercise sessions, Angelita exclaimed, “This is the first time I’ve sweat in two years!”

Now, seven months later, she is continuing the exercises she learned at Hartland. She says, “If it is cold outside, I just do the exercises inside—running in place, bending, stretching—just as I did at Hartland.”

Angelita’s husband, Antonio, came to Hartland Lifestyle Center with his wife, but he didn’t want to join the lifestyle session at first. However, after reading an article in the Hartland Ministry Report about Dr. Sanidad, he changed his mind. “I wanted to make sure that I was healthy,” he said. “It was not easy to come here all the way from British Columbia, Canada. But it was worth it. The program was very helpful to me, because I learned how to maintain my health with a new lifestyle.”

Antonio and Angelita used to eat a lot of meat, especially pork. But after one of the nurses explained how the meat’s waste products (especially nitrates) destroy the kidneys, they decided to cut it out of their diet. “We have to change our lifestyle,” they resolved. “We have to eat more vegetables and fruits. It’s going to be very different now.” Praise the Lord, Antonio and Angelita are still meat-free today!

At the end of the session, Antonio said, “By the grace of the Lord, we saw our health improve in the eighteen days we spent at Hartland Lifestyle Center, and we are happy.” He nodded in agreement as Angelita added, “I’m going to share this; I have to spread the good news to my friends!”
If you have been paying attention to the news, you have probably heard about the sub-prime mortgage crisis. Most of us, perhaps, haven’t thought of its prophetic implications.

The sub-prime crisis began this past fall when mortgage investors worldwide lost confidence in their investments’ value. Over the last decade or more, banks made loans below prime interest rates to homeowners who weren’t qualified. These risky mortgages involved large “balloon payments” at the end of five years. Banks sold these mortgages to other institutions, who in turn offered a share in the profit to willing investors. When homeowners could not pay those large balloon payments, banks had to foreclose. When this began happening on a large scale nationwide, mortgage investors around the world panicked and withdrew their investments.

The global loss of confidence in the U.S. sub-prime market brought the U.S. economy to a precipice. Banks didn’t have enough cash to operate without intervention. The Federal Reserve, the U.S. central bank, flooded the U.S. economy with billions upon billions of new digital dollars and lowered interest rates quickly to prevent an economic meltdown and a stock market crash. Though the dollar had been gradually declining in value due to a number of other factors, this massive infusion of cash into the U.S. economy significantly intensified the devaluation of the dollars already in circulation, and stimulated inflation.

Here is the prophetic point: A powerful time of trouble is coming upon the world. This includes natural disasters, war, crime, and other calamities. But it also involves an economic crisis. “The day is coming when the idols of silver and gold will be cast to the moles and to the bats, and the rich men will weep and howl for the miseries that shall come upon them...” Our High Calling, p. 200 (see James 5:1-5).

These things tell us that a time of financial stress and difficulty is near. The financial strain on the world, as well as global tensions, natural disasters, and immorality, will cause great trouble. Then people will look for a way to bring America back to prosperity. They are likely to say that God is not blessing America because of its sins. This will provide the excuse that is needed for citizens and lawmakers to press for Sunday laws to supposedly restore the blessing of God. God’s people will be thrown into a crisis for which most are not preparing. But those who have been faithful in their stewardship and have obeyed the Lord in all things will be sustained through the trouble.

Friends, now is the time to get your heart and life prepared for the coming crisis. Will you be ready? Now is the time to support God’s cause. Don’t wait until your money is worthless.
Burdened Hearts

As I travel, I meet many people with serious burdens on their hearts. I meet parents with deep burdens for the souls of their children, some of whom have left the fellowship of God’s church. Were they adequate parents? Did they do all they could for the salvation of their children? This burden is deepened by hindsight—it is much easier to see in retrospect where mistakes were made or where more could have been done. Some sense that their children are not living a fulfilled life and are suffering from emotional instability or even illness. Others are burdened by spouses who do not share their love for Christ and for His saving power in their lives. Many wives who became Seventh-day Adventists after their wedding desire their husbands to join their faith. They realize the difficulty of leading children to the Lord when their spouses do not share the same goal.

I have also met spouses who married out of the faith while they themselves were members of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Some expressed deep regret that they had not heeded the counsels and warnings from the Lord or from their family or church members in making this life commitment. Others have a burden for their parents who do not love God or His truth.

Yet, I also see how God has answered many prayers for loved ones. I see the mighty hand of God bringing salvation to both young and old. God has promised that as we come close to the end of this earth’s history, the Holy Spirit will move with mighty power around the world, and many who have left God’s truth will return and stand faithful to the Lord.

“When the storm of persecution really breaks upon us, the true sheep will hear the true Shepherd’s voice. Self-denying efforts will be put forth to save the lost, and many who have strayed from the fold will come back to follow the great Shepherd. The people of God will draw together, and present to the enemy a united front.” Evangelism, p. 693.

Let us pray earnestly for those who have left the fellowship of God’s people. Perhaps many of them were discouraged by the conduct of church members. Still others may have lost confidence in the church because of inconsistencies seen in its beliefs and practices.

May our prayers increase, not only for those close to us, but for all those who have been acquainted with Seventh-day Adventist Church messages and have chosen to leave the precious, saving faith.
