“Will you be a speaker at one of the monthly meetings for international students at the University of Virginia?” asked a distinguished-looking lady on the last day of a health seminar held at my church. What an excellent opportunity to share the health message!

Three Hartland students came with me to the meeting where over seventy people gathered for a friendship night. The University of Virginia (UVA) students bonded with the Hartland students while learning new ways to stay healthy. “You are welcome back anytime,” the organizers told me. “Will you do a presentation again in February or March?”

The lady who invited us wants to help our students colporteur and give Bible studies to UVA students. And yes, we are planning a cooking class there next spring.

I also had the privilege of organizing the students in the Health Outreach class to give free chair massages and blood pressure check-ups on Sundays. This term, they went to two local Food Lion stores, as well as a Lutheran church where the Three Angels’ Chorale gave a concert. The reception was excellent. A lady who received a massage at Food Lion said, “It was great! If I had time, I would do it again.” The pastor of the Lutheran church commented, “Our members especially appreciated the food samples. Let’s plan a cooking class in my church.”

At another event, we gave out food samples and massages in a local library. Jim, a neighbor from Rapidan, attended, but not on purpose! “I went to the library to check my email,” he says. “One of the students met me at the door and said, ‘Come into the conference room and get a free back massage.’ So I did. Afterward, he gave me some pamphlets about his school.” Jim decided to check Hartland out. Not knowing much about Adventism, he was tentative about the kind of reception he would get at Hartland. “I felt really awkward coming here,” he recalls, “but I am glad that you are so friendly and receptive.” Before he left, he stopped at Hartland Publications and bought The Great Controversy.

It is my joy to see how Hartland students touch the people’s hearts through the health message. Please pray that the Lord will continue to bless these contacts.
Missionary to Arkansas
by Lynette Allcock

“Hartland College helped my desire become reality.”

“I do not know where I would be today if I had not attended Hartland College,” says Sheri Trueblood. “I went to Hartland with the desire to become a missionary, and the Lord used Hartland to help my desire become reality.”

Sheri graduated in 1999 with a degree in Bible Instruction and a minor in Health Ministry to prepare her for mission work. “I love giving Bible studies and working with people in their homes. I know the Lord led me to take health classes and work in the Lifestyle Center, as the health message is the opening wedge for the gospel in people’s hearts.”

Sheri deeply appreciated Hartland’s commitment to follow God’s plan for education, especially regarding entertainment, dress, diet, and relationships. She also appreciated the caring, self-sacrificing staff. “The example of our women’s dean greatly impacted my life,” she recalls. “Though she was busy with college duties, she always found time for us. Every night she would visit us in our rooms and pray with us; she was genuinely concerned about our well-being and wanted to help us grow spiritually. She and her husband took us on mission trips and looked for ways to make our education practical. From them and other staff, I saw what it meant to be a genuine Christian and how to serve others using Christ’s methods.”

Currently, Sheri works at Wellness Secrets Lifestyle Center in Arkansas. “We have a live-in health program, health food store, and restaurant, and we give health seminars for our community and churches out of state.” Sheri cooks for the live-in guests, conducts cooking schools, and gives lectures. “I love the ministry that I am working with. My classes and training at the Hartland Lifestyle Center prepared me for this work, giving me a balanced approach to health. Working with Ray and Lee Heathman, former Hartland staff, gave me excellent training in conducting cooking schools and health seminars.”

As she traveled around the world, Sheri felt the impact of her time at Hartland. In the field, she found the resources of truth-filled literature very valuable. “I appreciate visiting Hartland—I feel like I’m with family who love and support me in whatever I do. Everything God does has a far-reaching purpose, and I know He led me to Hartland.” She concludes, “The Lord used my time at Hartland to build my character and draw me closer to Him. These are the most important possessions in my life.” ✿

Class Aim:
Teach and preach, for “Io, I am with you. . .
unto the end of the world.”

Vision: To inspire inner-city teenagers with the hope that Christ is coming again through media and friendship evangelism

“I was truly blessed by the sincere attitude for learning that the students radiate at Hartland. It was inspiring to see so many people from all over the world coming to Hartland to get solid, truth-filled training.
Throughout my college experience, the most important lesson I learned was to not get discouraged when things don’t go as planned, because it is just God’s way of testing me to see if I will submit to His plans.”

Vision: To help young people, especially high school students, find Christ

“...the best lessons I learned at Hartland were of character development. The work stations taught me to be punctual and responsible, especially in the little things. I learned how to be mindful of the things that were entrusted to me. Hartland College has also helped me to reach my full potential by giving me opportunities to teach while I was a student. I’m praying now for a school where I can be used, not as a mere teacher, but as a Christian role model, sharing God’s unconditional love with my students.”

“This is the only institution I know of that teaches the Bible intensively and carefully follows the Spirit of Prophecy. It also prepares young people to serve and to spread the gospel unselfishly.”
If there is an evening when people are willing to take literature, Halloween is it. At Hartland, we seized the occasion. As carved pumpkins cast a flickering glow on the streets in our local communities, about 50 staff and students from Hartland went out into the night, each with a different light—the light of 30 copies of the special Halloween edition of Last Generation magazine. They set out to take the truth to people at a time when most are in the mood to open their doors to complete strangers. God turned a holiday made to celebrate darkness into the perfect witnessing opportunity.

Eva, one of the students who participated, recalls, “This one lady had a mask on to scare the children who were coming to the door, but when she saw me and my magazine, she just started laughing. I told her who I was and what I was doing. She was so amazed and said that she would read this magazine for sure.”

“Everyone accepted the Last Generations and encouraged us to keep going at it,” says Ike, a student who also distributed Last Generation magazines in the communities around Hartland on Halloween.

The evening was an excellent opportunity to acquaint our community with what Hartland is. Many had either never heard of Hartland or only knew of the property before it became a college. Hui, another student, shares, “We met a man who had no idea what Hartland was. I told him that it was a missionary training school and that I had come from Malaysia to study there. He seemed really interested. I think that he really liked the name: Last Generation Magazine.”

With a fine witnessing tool like Last Generation, we felt no shame as we told people that we were training for Gospel service at Hartland College. As Ike puts it, “I was proud to hand them out, because they were so properly put together and designed.”

In one short evening, we passed out 1,300 copies of Last Generation Magazine. After the literature leaves our hands, we may never know who it has affected, but God gives us blessings even as we work. “I had a wonderful time,” says Angela Pulley, Dean of Women. Aaron called it a “great experience.”

In Heaven, though, we will be able to see the fruits of our labor. I invite you to join us in the incomparable experience of casting your bread upon the waters. Put God’s truth to work in your neighborhood.
Ikechukwu (Ike) Anurukem grew up in a home that was split by conflicting religious beliefs: Adventism and Catholicism. Born in Nigeria, his family immigrated to England when he was 17. How did this young man come to accept the Seventh-day Adventist message and end up at Hartland College?

"After I attended a series of evangelistic meetings in London, I was baptized," explains Ike. "When I was studying the Bible with my friends, I met Reggie Wright, who told me about Hartland." Three years later Ike came to Hartland College. "I am thankful that my parents helped me with enough finances to cover one year of school. But during my first term here I got really discouraged, and all I could do was pray. It was truly in that experience that I learned how to depend on God rather than on myself."

Hartland has provided not only a great learning environment for Ike, but also many other blessings. He is currently studying Pastoral Evangelism and Agriculture. "One of the biggest blessings for me was the summer gardening program and the opportunity to work at the farm," he says. "One of the things I learned while working on the farm was cause and effect. I realized that everything I do has a consequence, so every choice has to be thought out properly."

After graduation, Ike plans to return to London and use the things he has learned here to make a difference. He would also like to go back to his motherland of Nigeria to share the message of our soon-coming Savior with his people. "If I work as a pastor in a rural area, I will be able to help people practically with the things I am learning in agriculture. By God's grace, it will give more validity to the message I share."

Were it not for your faithful gifts to the Missionary Training Fund, Ike would not be able to continue his training for God's service. "I was planning to just go back home and work, but it worked out for me to get help from the Missionary Training Fund. Now I can stay to continue my education."

To those who sacrifice to make his and other students' education possible, Ike says, "It's good to know that in God's church there are people who are willing to support young people so they can train to preach the Three Angels' Messages. Thank you and God bless."
“I t was an adventure of faith,” relates
Hartland graduate Rodney Millin, now working in strife-torn Zimbabwe. “For the third time, I made my way to Harare to pick up the books.” Would everything go smoothly for Pastor Millin this time? Twice before, he had made the four-hour trek from his mission post to pick up the shipment of free literature from Hartland Publications, and twice his efforts had been thwarted. Would it happen again?

“The first time, the company lost track of the shipment. Then they called to say the books had arrived in Harare and that I should come quickly to pick them up before they started charging storage.” Pastor Millin continues the saga, “I went there the very next day only to be told that the railway people were on strike for higher wages, and as such they would not offload the pallet.”

However, one week later the strike was called off. Pastor Millin was traveling to Harare the third time, confident that God would show Himself strong, but uncertain of what problem would throw itself in the way.

On this third visit, God cleared the way.

“This time it went so smoothly. I paid very minimal customs fees (about US $20 in all). Who would have thought that $18,000 worth of books could be cleared for only $20?” The only problem that Pastor Millin faced was customs officials hungry for God’s Word. He tells us, “It was a job just keeping the people from customs at arm’s length lest they take all the books and Last Generation magazines. I gave them just enough to keep them wanting more.”

Pastor Millin walked out of the customs office praising God. “I was so excited. I finally got the books!” He immediately put them to use. He writes, “I have already begun distributing them to truth-starved people.”

Hartland is able to send these books to literature evangelists like Pastor Millin all over the world because of your gifts to the HP Free Literature Fund. As Pastor Millin puts it, “Your faithfulness and prayers have made all of this possible.” As we do our part and put our faith in God, we have the privilege of watching Him clear the way before us. Let’s join Him now and watch the Lord work!”
If you have ever heard Ray DeCarlo preach on the historic interpretations of Bible prophecy, listened to Maurice Berry warn of the dangers of worldly entertainment, or heard Dr. Standish or Dennis Priebe expose much of the false doctrine and new theology permeating the Christian church today, you have experienced the power of good preaching. At EGNtv, we want to make sure that this power will not fade, but rather that it will be preserved for the future.

This year we have launched one of our most ambitious, but long-awaited tasks: the conversion of over a thousand hours of archived Hartland presentations into DVD, CD, and MP3 formats. This was a task that we started at least twice but were forced to set on the back burner due to more pressing projects. But we can no longer put this off. As long as these video and audio cassettes sit on the shelves, they will deteriorate; these messages run the risk of being lost forever.

Perhaps the greatest reason we have put this project at the forefront is your response to our survey this past summer. When given the option of prioritizing our projects, many of you chose this project as number one. I can understand why. You don’t hear messages like these being preached from many pulpits today. It is our duty at EGN to enlighten the world and get these sermons into your hands!

This new project is the EGN Library of Sermons. We are bringing 25 years and hundreds of hours of good, straight preaching out of our archives and into your library. We are releasing each collection by speaker. Already, we have released three collections. The Ralph Larson Collection was released this summer at camp meeting, and the Maurice Berry Collection and Eric Betts Collection were both released during our Fall Convocation. (By the way, have you noticed that we always release our new products at convocation or camp meeting? Stay tuned!)

Our next collections to be released will be by Dr. Colin Standish and Dr. Russell Standish. By God’s grace, they will be waiting for you at our Winter Convocation in February.

You can find our currently released Library of Sermons collections in our catalog, and don’t forget to keep checking our catalog and website for new releases. Please pray for us that we can continue to enlighten the world with the truth of God’s Word through media!
"I have a passion for working for Jesus," says Sung Hoon Kang, "and I believe Hartland is one of the few places on Earth that is following the counsels of God and helping the youth come close to Him."

After graduating in 2006 from Hartland College with Pastoral Evangelism and Christian Media Management majors, Sung Hoon Kang joined the staff. However, shortly thereafter he had to return to South Korea to serve in the army. Due to his firm stance as a conscientious objector, he was sentenced to 18 months in prison. Many of you may have read his story in previous issues of Hartland Ministry Report or Last Generation magazine.

Despite his unfortunate circumstances, Sung Hoon is confident that God used it to prepare him for his future ministry. "In prison I met a lot of people who did not know God," he shares. "As I lived with them and dealt with them, it really helped me to understand their points of view and how to reach them. Also during that time, away from earthly ties and distractions, I could really spend time studying the Bible and communicating with God. That experience was a blessing to me."

Sung Hoon was providentially released from prison three months before his sentence was up. At this point, he was faced with an important decision. Several potential employers were vying for his commitment. Which offer should he accept? Deep inside, his heartstrings were tied to Hartland. So he put out a fleece. "If You don’t want me to go back to Hartland," he prayed, "don’t let me get a visa."

More than a month and several documents later, Sung Hoon received his visa and passport. Having been just released from prison, he knew this was nothing short of a miracle. "If it were not for God, I probably would not have received the visa," he reflects. "A lot of people were praying for me, and somehow He directed me to the right person at the right time. Even though it took longer than usual, I know it came in God’s timing."

We are overjoyed to have this dedicated soldier of Christ join our ranks at Hartland as a Bible and media teacher. "I believe that God is calling me to share the gospel through media; but if I don’t have the content, it’s useless. That’s why I chose to train in both Bible and media." Already, God is using Sung Hoon to inspire other young people with zeal to spread His Word. It is our prayer that these ripples will quickly spread around the world to mobilize a mighty army of young people to finish the Lord’s work.
“From the time I first set foot on the campus of Hartland College, God placed in my heart a burning desire to establish a similar institution in my country,” recalls Diego Silva, ’06. Diego has realized his dream by founding a missionary training school in Brazil. “We have over 30 students, and our first class of graduates is ready for service.”

“Without Hartland, I couldn’t do what I am doing now,” says David Fam, ’95, founder of Aenon Health Farm in Malaysia. It is an army of youth, rightly trained, that will finish the work. Education, p. 271. Friends, we have this army, but many soldiers are still novices. At Hartland, God is preparing this army for the challenges of the field.

“My vision as the new leader of the World Mission Division,” shares Nancy Carmouche, “is to implement more efficient ways to carry the gospel to other countries.” Many missionaries leave their homelands and struggle with cultures and languages that hinder their witnessing. In contrast, about half of our students come from foreign countries. When they go back home after graduating from Hartland, they are ready to reach their own people. They don’t need to spend several years studying the language and trying to understand the people’s world view. They are ready now!

In this area, we are failing to tap an unrealized wealth of evangelistic treasure. To tap it, we are developing the “Lord, Send Me” (LSM) program. This program will choose graduates, both foreign and American, who are already in the mission field but who need help with their ministries. LSM will help them analyze their needs, set goals, and address obstacles. Over the next year or two, LSM will provide organizational help, some financial support, and continued spiritual direction and encouragement.

As this program expands, we want to help our current students who plan to go into self-supporting work raise funds and develop realistic plans even before they graduate, enabling them to transition smoothly into God’s work. Already, several students are eagerly planning ministries in their homelands after graduation. They welcome the help this program would provide.

“When I heard that the World Mission Division is starting a program to help students plan their ministries, I was greatly encouraged,” says Yik Foo Soon, a student from Malaysia who has a burden for work in Asia. “I am looking forward to this program, especially at this time near the end of the world.”

Future issues of HMR will carry stories of how God is blessing the “Lord, Send Me” program. Thank you to those who have already sent gifts. Please pray that LSM will quickly advance God’s work.
You’re probably familiar with the story of how the Puritans came to the New World. Persecuted by the established church in England, these reformers fled to America. Once there, in firm control of their own colony, they established their own state church and persecuted dissenters just as they had been persecuted in England.

One of the dissenters they persecuted was a Separatist minister Roger Williams. Williams, a strong believer in separation of church and state, sought refuge from persecution in England by fleeing to the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1631. His criticism of the Puritans’ use of civil authority to punish religious infractions like Sabbath-breaking didn’t get him very far with the Puritan leadership. Concerned about his influence among the people, the colony called him to trial for his “dangerous opinions.”

Williams stood no chance of a fair trial. No one was brave enough to be Williams’ attorney. Not that this would help: the court was presided over by the man who acted as the prosecuting attorney. At the trial, he was given the chance to recant, but he stood firm. Roger Williams was banished!

Turned out in the dead of winter, Williams wandered for 14 weeks, as he put it, “not knowing what bread and bed did mean,” before he found shelter among friendly Indians. The loving care shown Williams by those who knew little of the gospel contrasted sharply with the cruelty given him by professed Christians.

Williams didn’t let this experience weaken his faith or dampen his zeal for freedom. He established a new settlement to fulfill his dream of liberty. Chartered in 1644, Rhode Island’s principles of freedom made it grow so quickly that the Massachusetts Bay Colony feared Williams would retaliate for their treatment of him. But his faith didn’t work like that.

Williams pioneered religious freedom instead of religious toleration, which merely gives grudging tolerance to people with views differing from the established church. Believing that God’s truth did not need the civil sword to help it along, Williams made Rhode Island a place where all religious beliefs were equal in the sight of the state. In his quest for soul liberty, Roger Williams paved the way for the establishment of religious freedom in the United States.

He could have, like many others before him, turned bitter and become a persecutor as soon as he had the power. Instead, he continued to seek freedom, not just for himself, but for all men and women. We can thank him for that. Let us do likewise, never forcing others to follow the truth, but gently calling all sinners to choose to follow Him in whom true freedom is found.
A. Like most other Americans, all of our staff are seeking ways to curtail expenditures. With soaring costs at the supermarket, many staff families are learning how to preserve foods.

Q. Is your farm doing anything to make the institute self-sufficient?
A. Indeed, it is. Under the energetic leadership of Bob Gregory over a number of years, our agriculture team has been increasing and diversifying our crops to make Hartland self-sustainable in food production. They are continuing unabated in this effort.

Q. Has Hartland lost any money?
A. If you are referring to the stock-market, the answer is “No.” We have followed God’s commands not to invest in stocks or other such investments. See Counsels on Stewardship, pp. 242-244.

Q. Have your donations suffered as a result of the grave economic crisis?
A. God has been so good to us and to our faithful supporters. As I write, we find our number of donors increasing, and with this increase we are pressing ahead in God’s work.

Q. Do you have other forms of help?
A. We certainly do. For example, three Seventh-day Adventist engineers have helped us greatly. We were required to replace our campus-wide electrical panels at the cost of $80,000. One of these engineers was able to find ways to meet the requirements for under $10,000! Two other engineers are saving us many thousands of dollars in engineering fees. Also, a Seventh-day Adventist architect is saving us much in architectural costs. How great is our God!

Q. Any other blessings?
A. Yes; because of the alertness of one of the engineers, we are saving about $100,000 by changing the usage permit of the conference center to that of a worship center. We are praising God.

Q. How is the ministry pressing forward?
A. By God’s grace, the college has added a full-time outreach director, and World Mission has added a full-time director. Please pray for constant progress in God’s work of soul winning.

Thank You We praise God that you have allowed Him to work through you to help us financially during this challenging year. Thank you for remembering our “where needed most urgently” designation. We appreciate your prayers, encouraging words, and sacrificial gifts, which help us touch lives for eternity.
Giving is the spirit of Heaven. Heaven was emptied for us that we might have its spirit of giving. But the enemy tries to find ways to prevent us from receiving this spirit of generosity. He tempts us to think we need more than we do. He gets us overstressed with problems to depress us and causes us to lose that happy spirit. Sometimes he stifles the giving spirit by using others to get us angry.

Some people are in a dilemma. They have been giving to God’s cause for many years, investing their time, influence, tithes, and offerings in what seemed to them to be the place where truth would be upheld. But now they realize that false doctrine is being preached. Schools are teaching worldly philosophies and engaging in sports and other activities that God has forbidden. They see rock music flooding into worship services, worldliness pressing in all around them, with people they were taught to respect often leading out in it. When they protest these things, they are told to be quiet, or they get arguments that sidestep the question and leave them without hope of change for the better.

Sometimes people lose the heart to give because they have been alienated by those who they thought were going to do right. They become disconnected, losing the sense of message ownership that once gave them passion for the truth and their church.

Whatever you do, don’t lose the spirit of giving! Giving of yourself to someone else will lift your spirits. When you know that you have done something good for someone else or for the cause of God, you have the satisfaction of seeing your benevolence at work. This is vital to spiritual life and to a happy, well-balanced outlook. In Luke 6:38 Jesus said, “Give, and it shall be given unto you” because He knew how important is the spirit of giving and that all generosity comes back to bless the giver.

We all need to be connected to a worthy cause to inspire our giving. Many people find that faithful self-supporting ministries give them a sense of message ownership once again. They know that their gifts will not be wasted on the stock market, in drama programs, cartoons, clowns, et cetera, but that their gifts will be used wisely and efficiently. They feel a part of the cause again.

Thank you for your support and prayers for Hartland. Our vision—training young people to take the truth all over the world—can’t be fulfilled without God and you. You are definitely needed! Make the spirit of Heaven your spirit, too.!

Hal Mayer, Stewardship Ministries Consultant
We have reached another milestone. October 17 marked the 120th anniversary of the historic 1888 General Conference session held in Minneapolis, Minnesota. It was at this conference that the Righteousness by Faith message was presented in eighteen talks by Elder E. J. Waggoner.

Against strong opposition from leaders, including General Conference President George Butler (absent because of illness) and Uriah Smith, Sister Ellen G. White strongly endorsed this message as the heart of the plan of salvation. If it had been wholeheartedly embraced by God’s people, they would have been in the heavenly home decades ago.

Of course, none of us were alive at the time this conference convened. Yet, we have the present-day challenge to do what our forefathers did not do—surrender our lives unreservedly to this God-given message of salvation.

It is vital that we understand this message. Sister White said under divine inspiration, “This is the testimony that must go throughout the length and breadth of the world. It presents the law and the gospel, binding up the two in a perfect whole…. The Lord would have these grand themes studied in our churches, and if every church member shall give entrance to the word of God, it will give light and understanding to the simple.” Testimonies to Ministers, pp. 95-96.

These and other passages on the topic (i.e. Selected Messages, vol. 1, pp. 355-405 and vol. 3, pp. 156-204) have most inspired me. Why not join me in studying them and asking for divine power to live the truths contained in them? You will be greatly blessed.

God will have a people “who would rather die than perform a wrong act.” Testimonies for the Church, vol. 5, p. 53. They will overcome “by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony,” and will love not their lives unto the death. Revelation 12:11. God has promised to give us the grace to do this through the perfect life of His Son, Jesus Christ. Romans 5:17. Why should not our generation be the one to bring in everlasting righteousness?
